If our natural capacities are ordered toward private ownership, and if the fulfillment of those capacities and of our moral obligations under natural law requires such ownership, then it follows, given the justification of natural rights outlined above, that the natural law entails a natural right to private property. I like my reflection. Studying intellectual property law has equipped me with the knowledge to help clients secure their rights, protect against potential infringers, and add to their bottom lines in nontraditional ways.

Admonitions against the sin of vanity were common in the medieval era. He made
